

Introduction to Linguistic Phonetics

Course Introduction

Mykel Loren Brinkerhoff

University of Washington

September 25, 2025

What is Phonetics?

Question

When you hear the word “phonetics,” what comes to mind?

What is Phonetics?

- The study of the sounds of human speech
- Involves the production, transmission, and perception of speech sounds
- Key areas of focus include articulatory phonetics, acoustic phonetics, and auditory phonetics, and speech perception

What is Phonetics?

- The study of the sounds of human speech
- Involves the production, transmission, and perception of speech sounds
- Key areas of focus include articulatory phonetics, acoustic phonetics, and auditory phonetics, and speech perception

What is Phonetics?

- The study of the sounds of human speech
- Involves the production, transmission, and perception of speech sounds
- Key areas of focus include articulatory phonetics, acoustic phonetics, and auditory phonetics, and speech perception

Professor

Name: Mykel Loren Brinkerhoff

Education: UCSC (Ph.D., 2025)

Contact: mlbrinke@uw.edu

Research Interests: Phonetics,
Phonology, Phonology
interfaces, fieldwork, endangered languages

Teaching Assistants

Name: Ty Gill-Saucier

Contact: ztgill@uw.edu

Research Interests:

Sociophonetics,
Language Ideologies,
Mississippi Gulf Coast
French, Phonetic bias in Automated Speech
Recognition (ASR).

Course Goals

At the end of this course, you should be able to:

Course Overview

- Class meets: Tuesdays and Thursdays, 8:30am - 10:20am
- Location: CUM 120

Course Overview

Assignments and Grading

Assignments and Grading

Policies

Policies

